FUR: There's no excuse

Caged

Trapped

Abused

Skinned

DID YOU KNOW?

- Rabbits, minks, foxes and other animals on fur farms spend their entire lives confined to tiny, filthy cages, where they constantly pace back and forth out of stress and boredom.
- Some fur farmers kill animals by anal or vaginal electrocution. Animals who are electrocuted experience the intense pain of a heart attack while they are still conscious. Many animals are poisoned with sodium fluoroacetate. Poisoning causes animals to suffer agonising deaths, which include vomiting, internal bleeding and long, painful convulsions. Other killing methods include gassing and suffocation. Sometimes animals are only stunned and may be skinned alive.
- Animals caught in steel-jaw traps endure excruciating pain from the steel bars which clamped down on their legs, paws and torsos. Animals caught in traps suffer the agony of blood loss, infection, gangrene, exhaustion, frostbite and shock for hours or days before trappers finally arrive to stomp on their chests or break their necks. Trapped animals, especially parents who are desperate to get back to their babies, sometimes chew off their own paws to escape. Traps also cripple and kill non-target animals, like kiwis, dogs and cats.
- Although notoriously cruel steel-jaw traps have been banned in almost 90 countries, they are still allowed in Australia and New Zealand.

You can prevent these atrocities.
Please, never wear any fur or fur trim.
